● Fashion, it seems, is set by the competition boys. If a new gimmick appears on the race track then it's a must for the road. Because large diameter carburetors are used on racing machines, many road riders try to use them—usually with poor results. Their motors become hopelessly flooded from the excess of fuel, the bike becomes difficult to start and is erratic. With the Wal Phillips fuel injector scoring success after success on the dirt and track, MM decided to test out this "instant speed" goodie and find out if it really does live up to its fabulous reputation.
